

Observation Story

Drew Daniels

10/8/19

COMM 2300

Observation Story

Midterm season can be stressful at the University of Tennessee at Chattanooga, but there is a group of students who believe they have found the cure to the hassle.

A group of roughly 12 students meet up almost every day on the sand court by Lockmilller to play a friendly game of volleyball

The group is friendly and even though the games may get competitive and sometimes heated, at the end its high fives and laughs.

“We will invite anyone who walks by to play,” Said Sal, “We are super open and always looking for more players and friends.”

With the weather cooling down, they can get out and play more and are no longer constricted to nighttime only.

If you are ever walking by the court by Lockmilller and you hear screams or laughter you may feel inclined to stop by and serve a few balls.